have been invited to attend and it is thought a very large number, from all parts of the country, will be present.

The Most Reverend Archbishop Spalding, of the diocese of Maryland and this District, has been delegated by the Pape to preside over the deliberations of the council.

The object of this important council is for the purpose of regulating the discipline of the church and provide a more systematic plan for the education of Catholic youth. It is thought the council will advise the endowment of several colleges and seminaries, and the education of priests will be one of the prominent adulects before the assemblage.

New Righesopal sees will be satisfiated and dishops appointed to preside over, them. All nominations must be referred to Rome for confirmation. It is thought that at lesst forty prelates, one hundred priests and a large number of supervisors of orders will be present. The first national council was held in the city of Battimore in 1853, and its decrees, after being approved by the Pope, were published, and their provisions have since been observed in the government of the Catholic Church. The October council will exercise a much greater influence than the preceding one, owing to the great increase of the religious orders of the Church.
